The practice of Acupuncture is based on the understanding that a vital energy flows along channels or meridians throughout our bodies. When this energy becomes blocked or does not flow freely, it causes disharmonies or disease. In order to correct this disharmony, the vital force must be stimulated so that it moves freely again. A set of very fine needles is used to stimulate peculiar points located on the body. The Acupuncturist uses an understanding of the flow of energy and the actions of the various Acupuncture points to treat diseases and disharmonies in the body. Quite significantly, Acupuncture is not usually painful. Acupuncture needles are tiny and quickly inserted through the skin, where the nerves that transmit pain are located. The sensation of the insertion is like a "quick pinch".

P.T.O.

Acupuncture has been the issue of active scientific research only since the beginning of the late 20th century and so its application remains disputed among western medical researches. Many organization, for example the (WHO), (NIH), and others have coordinated studies on the efficacy of Acupuncture. In general, there is an agreement that Acupuncture is safe when administered by well-trained PR actioners using sterile needles and that further research is appropriate.
