The origin of World Photography Day can be traced back to 1837 in France. Two Frenchmen named Joseph Nicéphore Niépce and Louis Daguerre developed the first-ever photographic process by inventing the 'daguerreotype'. The French Academy of Sciences officially announced the invention of the daguerreotype on January 19, 1837. It is believed that 10 days after the announcement was made, the French government purchased the patent for the invention and gave it as a gift to the world without any copyright.

While the French invention is believed to be the beginning of commercial photography, in 1839 William Henry Fox Talbot simplified the process of taking photographs. Mr Talbot invented a more versatile photographic process using paper-based salt prints. This more versatile system came as competition to the metal-based daguerreotype.

A photograph has the ability to capture a place; an experience; an idea; a moment in time. For this reason, it's said that a picture is worth a thousand words. Photographs can convey a feeling faster than, and sometimes even more effectively than words can. A photograph can make the viewer see the world the way the photographer sees it.

There's power in a picture because they help us understand and teach history. People connect with images and it shows how life was before the present time. How things used to look, what people wore, where they stayed, animals and many things about the world are passed on generationally through images. The simple act of creation is important in helping us as humans feel fulfilled. When a child finishes a drawing that may not be the masterpiece he or she thinks it is, they beam with pride as praise is showered down upon them. This excitement to create is something all of us share, no matter our age. And don't worry, your perceived level of creativity doesn't matter, it is the act of doing that counts. Photography is a type of art that has been around since the beginning. People have learnt to express their emotions on a particular point through pictures. Through this, memories are carried down to generations.

Mindfulness has long been associated with photography, though, and other studies have worked to solidify this connection. One such study found that, not only does photography help you to be "in the moment," but it also helps you appreciate that moment more. The act of taking photos can engage a group, pushing them to be more focused on that moment.

"Images are great for learning about history because people find that it's easier to learn about the past through images than text" to prove this statement St. Francis de Sales College has conducted Photography Competition on 17th August 2021. The objective of this event is to safeguard the art of culture among the people. Every year 19th August is a World Photography Day to commemorate this day, St. Francis de Sales College has celebrated photography day from 17th August to 19th August. Students are interestingly have participated from various colleges. This is a beginning point to uphold photography culture in our society.
